

SURVIVING THE AUTOMATED-INFRARED-URINAL-FLUSHING THING

We've all been there before: You walk up to the automated urinal and, without warning, the little red light starts flashing, triggering the automated flushing mechanism as microscopic spores splash all over your special area. Luckily, there are things you can do to avoid this.

1) APPROACH SLOWLY AND DECISIVELY:

If you're wishy-washy, the automated-infrared-urinal-flushing thing will think you're gone, signifying the start of the flushing/splashing process.

2) DON'T MOVE A THING – EXCEPT FOR YOUR “THING” (AND DON'T MOVE THAT TOO MUCH EITHER):

Stay still. The infrared light is triggered by movement in the immediate vicinity.

3) BACK AWAY QUICKLY WHEN YOU'RE DONE.

4) USE A STALL.

It's always been survival of the fittest. Drink milk.
