

SURVIVING THE WASHROOM STALL

Choosing the cleanest washroom stall is a lot like taking a multiple-choice test, except when you're wrong, you can't fix your mistakes with an eraser. Luckily, you can take some simple precautionary measures:

1) CHOOSE THE FIRST STALL. A recent study of public restrooms found that the stall closest to the door is least used and often the cleanest.

2) FLUSH FIRST. Make sure you have a clean slate. In other words, take a quick peek – then try as hard as you can to forget what you saw.

3) LEAVE. Thousands of tiny germs are propelled up into the air during the flushing process so don't hang around to watch the show (it's not very good).

It's always been survival of the fittest. Drink milk.
