

For 18,077 people last year, this was the direction to the nearest hospital.

After you experience physical trauma, the first sixty minutes are crucial. It's called the "Golden Hour," and the treatment you receive in this time can make all the difference. For 18,077 people last year, we were more than just an air ambulance. We were their hospital in the sky. Today, we connect 12.5 million people across Ontario to advanced medical care. Even in a province that stretches over a million square kilometres, you're always in good hands at 5,000 feet. Find out more at ornge.ca

Transport Medicine